VAN STACK TELLS OXFORD PEDAGOGUES OF LIFE IN JUNGLES OF AFRICA

The Oxford County Schoolmasters' Association held its February meeting Wednesday, Feb. 14th, at Stephens High School, Rumford, with one of the largest gatherings in the history of the association. Supper was served under the auspices of the Stephens High School domestic science department in the high school cafeteria, following which a short business meeting was held. It was voted to hold the County Prize Speaking Contest at Canton, April 27, instead of May 4. the date previously set. The next meeting will be held at Norway on March 14, to which Androscoggin

County schoolmasters are invited. Following the business meeting the members adjourned to the auditorium in an open meeting which porting lead, was both clever and opened with several selections by Stephens High School Band under the direction of Harry J. Cohen. Rev. Frederick Young next introduced Harry C. Van Stack, Officer of the Australian Convict Ship "Success," Mr. Van Stack, the son of Dutch missionaries, was born in the interior of Transvaal where he spent the first twenty years of his life, and he gave a very interesting account of some of his adventurous experiences in the jungles of Africa, Following Mr. Van Stach's address, Supt. FOOTLIGHT PLAY PLEASES AUDIENCE

"The Yellow Shadow" Success at Odeon Hall Tuesday Evening

A good sized and very enthusiastic audience braved the storm Tuesday evening to see the third production of the Bethel Footlight Club, a mystery-comedy, "The Yellow Shadow." From start to finish the play was a grand success.

The scene was laid at Viewcrest Lodge, which had been inherited by Mildred Marvin, played by Dorls Lord, who gave unusual ease and natualness to the part. Her friend. Alice Perkins, was played by Betty Anderson with much grace and charm, and Harold Marshall in the role of Herbert Marvin, the supconvincing. Dr. Hood gave a subtle portrayal of the suave lawyer. Gilbert Wright,

The comedy parts were Sheriff Macklin and J. Steel. The former played by Earle Eldredge, with his accustoried professional skill, and the latter with the humor which is characteristic of Naomi Bean.

Dona'd Kellegg's histrionic ability was demonstrated fully in his Individual Interpretation of Jed Travis. Mildred Allen, as Nell Travis, mysterious housekeeper at Viewerest, gave an outstanding performance. Gwendolyn Stearns as Hazel Wayne, the psychic and emotional type, did an exceptional piece of acting. The part of Wong Song, the Chinese villain, was given by Karl Stearns with comedy and character touches.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1984

The fact that the chairman of the Board of Selectmen, and the Collector of Taxes have announced that they do not wish to serve longer in those capacities has brought forth perhaps more pre-town meeting talk than for several years past. It is to be expected and to be desired that citizen's show a lively interest in their town's business. Since two very efficient officers cannot be secured to continue their work, it behooves us to try and And men who are likely to approach the mark set by the present incumbents.

The voters are fortunate in having, so far, four men who have signified their willingness to accept the responsibilities of town office. In fairness to their constituency all candidates should take steps to make their plans known to the pcaple before March 5th. It is all too possible for a complete turnover in town administration to occur at a Rest, here rest beneath the shade needlessly high cost of educating a new board of town fathers in a town which clings to the method of electing all three selectmen each year.

In making the choice of selectmen let us remember that our town's business is running into large sums of money. A man fit to take charge of municipal affairs should be one who is reasonably success. Rest, then rest—no monarch's ful in handling his own business or who has qualifications which indicate ability, interest and honesty.

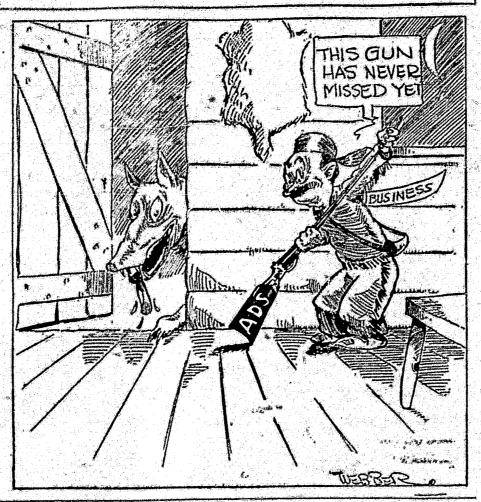

There will be only one more issue of the Citizen before town But by thy wisdom-not thy spear meeting. It will be a step in the right direction if all candidates will make public announcement in next week's Issue.

Some time ago the Boy Scouts of America requested the National Board of Fire Underwriters to provide them with material on fire prevention with which to instruct their Oh, may the virtues, honored dead, members. The result was a 65 page book entitled "Firemanship." for Merly Hadge exeminations. Over 60,080 floy Scouts use it in proparing for tests each year.

It would be an excellent idea if a national program was started to acquaint children of all ages with the hazards of Are, and how to do away with them. Fire is one of the most rectous of problems, it touchre overy life, every piece of proporly. It menaces us all it inflates taxes, destroya Jobs and lucestments and business opportunities. or White glanced over his er rexedly. This would be ver from Friendship, who had red to walt for daylight besarting round Pemaquid point.

The doctor wished that the man had come a little earlier or a little later. It annoyed him to be found apparently in the act of employing his beautiful 🦥 ward, Capt. Warren Poole's daughter, as one might make use of a Kanaka pearl diver.

Doctor White was annoyed at the interruption. But as his experienced eyes swept over the details of the boat assembling out of the fog, this inomentary vexation gave place to astonished chagrin, to dismay. Here was not their helated diver nor even the De Corlays, nor Tom. Il was a heavy yawl-rigged semi-cabin cruiser. As it forged slowly down on them, swinging off a little, the doctor discovered a small French flag flying from the mizzen truck.

The significance of this was very evident. No boat halling from a neighboring French possession, especially Miquelon Island, of which the commerce now deeply interested the United States revenue service, was going to advertise her nationality unless she felt herself to be a virtuous craft and entitled to the protection of her flag. This could be no other than that Sebastien described as a scoundrel by Jessica and Robert, and now come to have a go at the Fourquet!

In the shock of this forbidding complication Jessica sat and stared at the bont as it drifted slowly up to them. Three men were in her cockpit, one of them holding the heavy, old-fashioned tiller. This would be Sebastien, the doctor thought, his fists clenching, and the fellow looked indeed the sort that the girl and Robert had described.

His face looked intelligent and alert, Jess stealthy than scheming and mercliess rather than of the type that goes with slinking treachery. There was a sort of Tartar suggestion about the wide cheekbones, hooked nose, square angled Jaw and narrow, pointed chin. Utterly ignoring Doctor White and Jessica, he ordered one of the men; to let go the anchor.

Doctor White raised himself a little in the bont.

"You are too late," he said in a crisp, nutlioritative voice. "I've got a line fast to this wreck the salvage from her,"

Sebastien utterly ignored this statement. So far as concerned himself and his immediate operations the elderly gentleman and girl in the Whitehall rowboat might not have been there at all. The swarthy, stolld youth who had gone forward cleared the turns of chain cable from the winch and let go the an-

Jessica, as if awakening from a trance, whipped up her gown and enveloped her dripping body in its folds. Schastlen stepped nimbly forward to the well deck of the boat and threw a tarpaulin from some thing placed there. Doctor White saw this to be a diver's air pump.

The third man, who had gone into the cuddy aft, came out with his arms full of the helmet and other gear. The youth forward stoppered the cable, then took off his oliskin overcoat. The two other men did likewise, then carried on briskly their preparations.

During these rapid evolutions not one of them so much as threw a glance at the rowboat and the pair abourd it, almost alongside,

"Are we going to stand for this, Gardy? I'm afraid of that—that man I-1 really wouldn't care to elope with him, the-the way he'd do it!" Doctor White glanged at Jessica and shook his head. He had been watching sliently the rapid prepara tleas going on aboard the vessel Jessica slavered a little, but not from cold, because her woolen gown was warm and heavy, and the night chill had by this time left the air while the sun, trying to been it way through the fluffy fog. ; we it a misery warmth that provided a little later to make a hot, stiff day, The shiver was one of nervous tension and expectation, due to some. thing in her guardian's silent wal-

At the end of several taloutes this began to tell on Sebastien's nervea The strain of Indian blood that first had motived his grim tacharally was unequal to the support of it when thing back at him in 80 up sered a way. Semetarn began to breathe furid curses at his men for their slowness, and trota under his tlack eyebrows he she more frequent malevolent glames at the calmly vigilant watcher in the rowbont.

Then all at once, the wallle principles in his cosmos fetched away from their container, blew out the plug of it, so to speak. He had picked up the helmet and seemed about to try it on when, glancing at the rowboat, he flung it down on deck again and strode to the main rigging, selving a shroud in one grimy hand.

"What you want?" he snarled. Why don't you clear out bout your business? What you tink you goln', Doctor White did not move a muscle. He neither smiled nor frowned, but continued to regard the furious Sebastien as if he had been a violent inmute of an institution for the criminalig insane. Jessica's heart beat a little faster, but she too preserved her disdainful calm. Sebastien selzed the other shroud and shook both parts enragedly, like a great ape might tug at the bars of bis cage.

"I know you, mister," he snarled. T see dem French officers go along your house. You tink you find out what dey lookin' for and beat 'em, You t'ink you play 'em one lousy tr'rick. I fool you, by dam'!"

This frenzied outburst brought no more response than before. Doctor White took out his watch, glanced at it, then returned to his fixed contemplation of Sebastien. Wheeling from the rigging Sebastien picked up the belieft again, half raised it, then scowled across at Doctor White, A curious indecision scemed to possess the man. Doctor White, as if observing it, hal? turned in his seat and, drawing in the line that anchored the boat to the wreek until

As he did so, Sehastlen, us if galvanized into sudden action, pitched into the cabin of the cruiser. Like any other savage beast of primal instant, his ferocity was inflamed by the startled flight of a quarry that had taced him boldly up to this moment. No doubt Doctor White was correct in his perception of a murderous assault on the verge of its discharge, and it is fairly certain that his anticipation of it was all that saved the lives of Jessica and himself.

That—and the fact that Sebas tien's movements were clogged by the leaden soles of his diving outfit When he plunged out on deck again, snarling with rage at his indecision and waving a big automatic pistol. the doctor had come near to estabitshing a rowing record for one hundred yards single sculls in a badly trimmed Whitehall boat, and presented a poor target in the fog.

Schastlen, although perceiving that he probably had missed his coup even then might have trusted to good marksmanship to retrieve it. But as he steaded himself to ascertain how big the target looked against his sights the sound of a motor bont's exhaust pulsed on his ear drums. was the chance w tamper a bit with the diving gear heaped up in the forward part of the cabin. He had seen the De Corlays leaving Whale Island that afternoon, concluding, naturally, that Doctor White had offered them ald in their endeavor and had looked up a diver for them.

With true sailor hospitality, Mike not only offered to set him on his way, but put a spare bunk at his disposal for the night.

It may therefore be understood how thoroughly the skids were greased for the launching of Tim and Robert into a cross chop of troubled waters. Alike, his thrift loosened by the practical demonstration that his wares were wholesome, had gone below to serve himself another little nip just when Tom's launch passed them. So Sebastlen was steering the vessel. IIIs keen eyes sighted her white side. and followed her as she made her turn to fall in astern of him.

Sebastien could not guess just what was afoot, for radio telepathy has its limitations, but he scented trouble. The chances were he thought that they were being for lowed by an official launch on the lookout for bootleggers.

He had a frantic moment. They were towing a dory, and he was tempted to haul it up under the stern, drop into it and cast off. But he reckoned that he could not manage this without being detected from the following launch, when such action would by taken as a proof of gullt. Besides, there was the chance that their pursuers might not be officers at all, but gentry with a thirst, who on stelling the cruiser sneaking along the shore without lights, had made a good guess as to her poss.bilities. And for Sebastien to decamp would be for him to love his chance of spiking his rival's guns.

Glancing astern, Sebastien saw that the launch was rapidly overhauling them, not more than a furlong away. He called to Mike and Nevertheless he was nervous. Telling Sebastien to hauf the dory alongside, Alike ducked below, lugged out the whisky case and lowering it into the dory threw over it a worn old sall that seried as a coverlet when he slept aheard. The darkness was opaque enough to prevent the discovery of this maneuver from the distance of the following boat.

Waters of Nile in Check Even the Plaraolis realized the mecessity of keeping the waters of the Nile in check, and in their age dikes and embankments were constructed. Irrigation and regulation of the water supply were one of the main problems of government. The basic system of irrigation, which was the first method used, arose directly from the annual Booding of the country, and is still practiced over about a quarter of the cultivated area of Egypt, partheularly Upper Egypt. According to this system, the land is divided into compartments by banks, and these compartments or basins are filled by canals which take off below the level of the flood. The water remains on the land for six or eight weeks, and then is run back through escape channels to the river which, In the meantime, has follen As soon are sown, and the land receives no more water until the nort year. Two weeks ago Gordon E, Lathrop threw his nat into the third selectman's ring. Mr. Lathrop is native of Connecticut, but for sev eral years has lived in Maine, coming to Bethel two years ago. Since that time he has shown a keen interest in local affairs and has offered constructive criticism from time to time in the Citizen's columns His frank statement of policy two weeks ago will doubtless swing many votes to his column,

Since it became understood tast week that Leslie E, Davis, who has served as collector of taxes for eight years with remarkable efficiency, was not to seek re-election, two candidates for that office have appeared.

Garard C. Eames stated in an ad vertisement last week that he would appreciate the votes of Bethel citi zens as tax collector a week from Monday. Mr. Eames was born in town and has spent the greater part of his life here. He graduated from Gould Academy in 1926 and from the Northampton Commercial College in 1932. The past two years he has been employed in Bosserman's drug store and he is also in terested in the poultry business at
